That fills up the measure of my life's grief.

The links of lave so rudely sundered.

Were not in honorable combat done.

Then could I have borne it with woman's strength.

But O! my bleeding country, I submit.

For thy good, to bear this double sorrow.

This calamity fell heavy on the family, a double bereavement to the wife and mother, no friends to sympathise with her in this heartble bereavement to the wife and mother, no friends to sympathise with her in this heart-rending trial. William Butler, another son, was but a stripling, he took the field, and well did he battle for the great principles of rational freedom, taught him at the fire-side of his home. He was young to be the counsellor, and protected his widowed mother and her help-less orphans, but he did this, with all the energies of his nature, aided by an ever watchful providence, "that tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." William Butler was forced to keep out of the way of the tory-scouts, who shorn lamb." William Butler was forced to keep out of the way of the tory-scouts, who were now in the ascendant, and over-run the whole country, in this dark and perilous momoment of the great struggle of despotism and freedom. Its life was sought with untiring avidity, by these plundering, murdering allies of England.

liis father and brother were lying mangled with many others on the spot where the tory band had so foully butchered them. No friend the band had so foully butchered them. band had so foully butchered them. No friend in the form of man dared to rescae their bodies from the scene of murder; no, this task fell on delicate woman, on the dau hter and sister of the dead. Nancy Butler, accompanied by a hear relative, Mrs. Smith, whose husband had fallen under the merciless hand of the tory at the same time and place. These two females, with none of the sterner sex, for a support, harnessed a horse to a rude slide, and together went on their mission of love and affection.—O, ye daughters of Carolina, who to-day are surrounded with all the blessings worked out for you by revolutionary sires, how would you stand this trial of woman's fortitude and woman's love would not your delicate nerves, nursstand this trial of woman's fortitude and wo-man's love would not your delicate nerves, nurs-edlin the lap of case and security, quail under the task? But these daughters and mothers of the revolution were schooled in suffering and every kind of privation. Then we should tread softly o'er their graves, and shed the tear of synpathy to their memories, and learn lessons to guide us should the necessity ever arise to require a similarity of action. quire a similarity of action.

When these two females arrived at the spot

fearnage what a sight met their vesion

"On the field of death! mute they stand, In sorrow for their wo struck land, The husband whom the many a year Long love and mutual ties endear.

The father, who no more shall strain His orphan to his breast again, The bridegroom who had hardly pressed His blushing consort to his breast.

Alas! what links of love that morn By tories hands assunder torn; Reader, there was not one tender tie Butthere dissolved its relies lie."

But there dissolved its relies lie."

Together in one common grave, almost uncovered, were all the bodies of these martyred whigs, promiscuously thrown, some headless and armless, bearing the marks of the brutality of their butcherers, for they had not fallen by the hand of a generous enemy, but by the hand of the merciless tory—their countrymen, aye their neighbors. Would that we could, with the dash of our pen, obliterate from the memory, these dark doings, but they are yet fresh before us. Often has boiling passion shook our frame at the recital of the suffering of these troublesome times.

Mrs. Smith identified her husband; he was taken from the rest, washed and dressed with that care that woman alone is capable to do, and then placed on the bier.

Nancy Butler failed to recognise her father has bod lean literally channel to be and along and and seal, this ninth day of Angust in the year of our Lord.

the had been literally chopped to est to satiste the vergence of his cown. Fors. With anxious care she searched among the festering dead, for the body of her father, but she knew not that father, so mangled and mingled were the bodies of these victims of tory rage. She found the cap that her father were on his head under his hat; she washed it, and a piece of skull bone was sticking in it; this ended the search. They enrefully as they could, covered up the dead, and left the sickly seeing for home. In vain the wife and mother demanded from In vain the wife and mother demanded from her daughter the bodies of her husband and son. The answer was "Mother, I knew them not!" The death how had histed out their individuality. The instructed pay was all that I knew of my mean forced father.

We have given this page in the life of Mrs. Nancy throcks to show to the present generation, what women of the last age had to encounter to show that he was a women of tion, what women of the last age had to encounter, to shew that she was a woman of moral strength of character, that she suffered in her country's cause, and she, humble as she was, still was identified with the martyrs of liberty, and the glorious results of human freedom now enjoyed by millions that were then unborn. Her long life was marked by steady, virtuous action, and untring attention to all the practical duties of life as christian, wife, mother, neighbor and friend. She was left a widow with eight children; by frugal care she raised them up and even made some property property for them, which she liberally distributed among them. In a word, she was a mother to her children. She lived and died beloved by them OSE WHO KNEW HER AND LOVED HER.
